The mission of this project is to provide travellers with a single page of complete, organized travel information and to demonstrate that it is quite possible to travel around Washington State without a car.

In the Winter of 1995 an elderly Japanese woman sat down at my information desk. Her interest was the Salish People: she had come to Washington just to see the world famous Makah Museum in Neah Bay. She asked me how to get there. I told her it was not possible without a car. She was very sad and returned to Vancouver. A couple of months later I discovered I was wrong. I was very sad. This project is dedicated to her.

The return trip is on the back of this page.

These times are for Monday through Friday only.

Most buses run Saturday and a few Sunday. See Sat/Sun Connections page.

OFF: exact location of bus stop at destination
RIDE: average length of each bus ride
EDIT: bus times corrected or confirmed as of this date

Rural connections can be very, very tight, however the drivers are helpful! When you board a bus, ALWAYS tell the driver where you are connecting or getting off.

Schedules may change. Call the transit agencies to verify especially Black Ball ferry. Many schedules change from summer to winter. Let me know what you think mrk@carsstink.org .

The mission of this project is to provide travellers with a single page of complete, organized travel information and to demonstrate that it is quite possible to travel around Washington State without a car.

In the Winter of 1995 an elderly Japanese woman sat down at my information desk. Her interest was the Salish People; she had come to Washington just to see the world famous Makah Museum in Neah Bay. She asked me how to get there. I told her it was not possible without a car. She was very sad and returned to Vancouver. A couple of months later I discovered I was wrong. I was very sad. This project is dedicated to her.

The return trip is on the back of this page.

These times are for Saturday and Sunday only. All buses run more often on weekdays. See Weekday Connections handout.
