The mission of this project is to provide travellers with a single page of complete, organized travel information and to demonstrate that it is quite possible to travel around Washington State without a car.

In the Winter of 1995 an elderly Japanese woman sat down at my information desk. Her interest was the Salish People; she had come to Washington just to see the world famous Makah Museum in Neah Bay. She asked me how to get there. I told her it was not possible without a car. She was very sad and returned to Vancouver. A couple of months later I discovered I was wrong. I was very sad. This project is dedicated to her.

The mission of this project is to provide travellers with a single page of complete, organized travel information and to demonstrate that it is quite possible to travel around Washington State without a car.
 In the Winter of 1995 an elderly Japanese woman sat down at my information desk. Her interest was the Salish People: she had come to Washington just to see the world famous Makah Museum in Neah Bay. She asked me how to get there. I told her it was not possible without a car. She was very sad and returned to Vancouver. A couple of months later I discovered I was wrong. I was very sad. This project is dedicated to her.

The return trip is on the back of this page. These lines are for Saturday and Sunday only. All buses run more often on weekdays. See Weekday Connections handout.
